

Haiti sells electrical distribution boxes

Article Overview

Haiti has local manufacturers and suppliers of electrical distribution boxes, serving both household and industrial needs.

Local Manufacturing and Suppliers

Haiti hosts companies that manufacture and supply household and high-voltage electrical distribution boxes. While some Haitian companies focus on retail and wholesale distribution, there are also local manufacturers capable of producing electrical enclosures and distribution panels for domestic use . For example, Matelec S.A. is a prominent Haitian retailer and wholesaler that provides a wide range of electrical components, including wiring devices and distribution boxes, across Port-au-Prince and Pétion-Ville . These companies cater to households, contractors, and facility managers, offering both in-store and online ordering options.

Market Context

The Haitian electricity sector is largely managed by the government-owned utility Électricité d'Haïti (EdH), which oversees generation, transmission, and distribution . Due to limited grid coverage and frequent power shortages, private suppliers and self-generation solutions, including solar PV and small generators, have become increasingly important . This environment has created demand for electrical distribution equipment, including boxes, to support both grid-connected and off-grid installations.
