

How to remove fiber optic cables and the price

Article Overview

The cost of removing or terminating fiber optic cables typically ranges from $1 to $3 per foot, depending on cable type, access difficulty, and labor requirements.

Cost Breakdown

The total cost of fiber optic cable removal depends on several factors:

- Labor: Skilled technicians are required for safe removal, splicing, and testing. Labor rates typically range from $1.00 to $3.00 per foot, with higher rates for difficult access or outdoor installations .
- Materials and Equipment: Removal may involve connectors, splice closures, patch cables, and specialized tools like fusion splicers or OTDR testers. Equipment rental or purchase can add to the cost .
- Permits and Access: Urban areas may require permits, road or sidewalk closures, or right-of-way approvals, which can increase costs .
- Cable Type: Single-mode fiber is generally more expensive to handle than multimode fiber due to precision requirements .
- Termination Method: If the removal involves terminating the cable for reuse, methods like fusion splicing are more costly than mechanical splicing or epoxy-and-polish techniques .
